Being Your Own Boss – Worth It, or Not?

Becoming their own boss is the dream for many people. They imagine a future of setting their own schedules, and reaching their own goals.

Being your own boss can indeed be rewarding, but it's far from being easy and it's also not for everyone. As a boss, you get to set your schedule, which is excellent when you have 5 family responsibilities. You can choose when and where you work. For many, this flexibility means no more long commutes and a fight for parking space. Not having to sit in the car, bus, or train frees up a lot of time, which lends even more flexibility to your schedule.

Managing a business that you own, frees you from the corporate weight. You get to choose how creative you want to be when making decisions about your business. You no longer 10 have to worry about your ideas getting shot down by a boss or supervisor who lacks your creative vision.

When you're a team of one, you are much more agile and can implement whatever client portal, or client management tool that best suits your purposes. For example, True Client Pro CRM is jam packed with tools business owners can use to keep organized and grow 15 your business.

However, entrepreneurship can be hard to handle since when you become a one-person band, you are suddenly a marketer, accountant, content creator, and head of client management, to name just a few. Somewhere in between doing all those jobs, you need to find the time to do some work that brings in the dollars. Moreover, when you're on your own, 20 taking some much-needed vacation time can become problematic, as no one can step into your role. If you're not a self-starter, then creating a business may not be the best move for your career.
